Superstiences that predict the misfortune and luck was a common belief since the ancient times. This article concentrates on these believers and their origins. Superstations are widely considered irrational crenchs and practices that are inconsistent with the laws of science. However, as old people have examined almost all occurrences, believing that being a lucky warning or an indication of good luck. To get in touch and get our latest Newshistorian Thomas Sharper Knowlson explained that superstitions probably had their origin of the early man's beginning - "à € It is an attempts to explain nature and human existence; Invite fortune; pry in the future; and avoid ills. There are innumers superstition based on these evils, many resulting in disease, loss of wealth, failure in personal ventures and death. Below, there is a description of some of these lucky superstitions and where possible details about the origins were added. black cats: superstition are conflicting crenchs in relation the cats if they represent good or lucky. For the ancient Egyptian cats were sacred to the Goddess Isis and were as revered that someone who killed a cat was executed. In the middle age, although cats were suspiciously in many parts of Europe, particularly black cats that were believed to be the devil in disguise or the familiar of the witches, which could become the own witches after seven years of servion. People believed that the crossed paths with a black cat was a sign that the devil was watching them and until today some people fear that their esteem cat will suck the body of the body while they are sleeping. To prevent them from closing the cat out of the rooms at night. Clock: An Omenia Olden day clock required constant and winding maintenance to keep them working. If the owner of the clock became ill, they would be unable to curl the clock shortly before his death, which would eventually see the clock end and stop working at the time the owner died. This was probably the supply of superstition that the clocks will stop at the same time as its owner dies. Crows: Omensin Some rural communities were considered a cursed to find inforture if a crow had begun Cau To nearby. To avoid this nearby calamity some people would curved or took from their hats when a raven appeared around them. The origin of the crow as a bearer of news can originate from the old Greek legend. Apollo, the God of the Sun, Medicine, Prophecy and Knowledge among many other things, said have traveled with a white raven as a companion. The crow reported Apollo than his love, a nymph named Coronis was unfaithful. The fury of Apollo resulted in Coronis's death, in addition to turning the black coronit feathers, condemning the animal forever as a messenger of news. Right Clock. Superstitionals found in boring buildings in wood furniture and structures, death watch Beetle received his name of the crencal that the sound playing in the house predicted a death in the family. The beetle really makes that noise to communicate and attract a mate. dogs: omensa puppy howling in an open door is supposedly a death premium for someone in the house. A possible explanation for this is that the dog may be able to feel a chemical change in human tissue and therefore be able to feel that its owner is sick because there are historical cases of dogs acting distressed hours before their masters death. dogs are also believed to be able to feel that people are good and bad, then a dog whimpering or howling when a child The born can be a sign that the child will live an unhappy life and possibly become a criminal. Falling dreams: Common superstition of the superstition is that a person will die in his sleep they have a dream where they are falling and do not wake up before The floor. According to dreams oricles that fall dreams can simply represent a feeling of inferiority and and in undertakings and social enterprises, such as work and relationships. However, some dreams of dream claim that dreams that actually predict this failure, instead of being based on the insecurities of the person. Ladders: superstition when a ladder is placed against a wall, shape A triangle, symbolizing the sanctimal Trinity. Walking through the triangle is considered an insult to the Trinity that attracts the attention of the devil. There are several removes to push the lucky after walking under a ladder, including a desire while traveling the triagle; Walking back by the triangle again where you started walking; and crossing the fingers as you pass and keep them crossed until you see a dog: the superstition laughter is considered good for your health, some superstitious people believe that those who laugh excessively were "excessive posts "Of joy". Do not live much more. Another superstition is that those who laugh or sing before the breakfast café crying before dinner. This superstition may have originated from the idea that happiness is something that needs to be won, and to be overly happy at the beginning of the day before doing any work is invited infort. mirrors: superstition of year before the mirrors, the man looked amazed in swimming pools and ponds and interpreted his reflection as a piece of his soul that could be injured. This crenca was performed when the mirrors were invented. A mirror contained soul of the person who is before her, breaking a mirror It follows in his soul being injured, flourishing them with seven years of bad luck. This duration was chosen by the Romans who believed that the body was renewed every seven years. Another popular explanation is that it may have taken people seven years to save enough money to buy a new mirror. Bad luck from a broken mirror can be avoided by throwing the fragments in a fast race flow to lead to Infortúnio or grinding the pieces in pale so that it can not reflect. It is also considered unlucky to see the reflection in the candlelight and that a child should not look for a mirror before being one year old, if contrary, they will stutter or die shortly after. In many countries, people keep mirrors covered with rooms where people are dying in fear that they see their own reflection at the time of the death of the person to untie them to die in the near future. To prevent your soul from being stuck in mirrors and other reflective surfaces, some people also keep these covered before death or go to sleep. OVERO: Omenshowls are often considered to be the symbol for Athena , the ancient Greek goddess of wisdom. However, very similar to the crows, they are also believed by many people in history to be a lucky career. The ancient Romans linked the owls to evil forces due to their night nature. They also believed that an owl wrote to death, and was this president who preceded the death of Caesar Judge, Augustus Caesar and the Roman general, Agripaca. Adoda, some believe that seeing an owl during the day or having a land Close to your house and start the joke is a premium of misfortune to death. Playing salt on fire is said to avoid this lucky. Waking up to Folklore Galás an owl, but can simply be an indication that a young woman in the neighborhood lost her virginity Pictures: Superstition, people believe that a person is destined to die imminently If their photo or photograph fall from the wall without apparent reason. An American superstition is that hanging the image of someone behind on a wall will disaster for that person. The evil eye: an old superstition and almost universal superstition, with records of the malignant eye dating back more than 5,000 years for Sumeria and Babylon. The beliefs still exists today in parts of Europe, SIA, Africa and East Mention, that someone could Amaldico simply through an appearance of envy, antipathy or malice. This curse could be placed by not Magi and witches, but old ladies and people with unusual eyes, like those who had very closely eyes, had inflamed eyes or were crossed. The medical peripels treated the people bewitched from the evil eye they have supposedly felt a particular torment. It was also guilty for the death of children and cattle, which was common in the first modern communities. Our ancients for the curse included looking down or spitting in the eye of the person who placed the curse or the blood of the forehead; making the cross sign; wearing a protective talisman; and burning any cattle that died as a result of the evil eye, to refresh the curse in the one who placed this. ThTeen or Triskaidekaphobia - the cordless fear of the number 13: a superstition concept that thirteen as an unlucky number Be traced to nordica mythology for a dinner stuck by twelve gods in Valhalla. The event was interrupted by the arrival of a third third threesome, Loki the cheater and fire of God, who shot a mistletoe of mistletoe in Baldr, the God of joy and joy. The project killed Baldr and Darkness and Mourning scattered throughout the earth, I deliver the superstition that a grouping of thirteen people is lucky. In the Old Testament it is traditionally believed at Eve tried Adam in Eden's garden on Friday. This idea also is supported in the New Testament of the Bible, where Jesus was betrayed in his last supper before being crucified on a Friday. A common superstition is that if thirteen people join, the first to rise will die within the year. This can be avoided by all guests who get up from their seats at the same time.
